July 2, 2021 (Los Angeles, CA) – Today, Dominican-American artist María Isabel introduces another musical chapter with new single and video, "No Soy Para Ti," released as the first offering of new music since her signing to Warner Records. Directed by Alfred Marroquin, the video finds María returning home to New York, and coming to the realization that her own self love and appreciation is stronger than any connection she could find with someone else. The song follows her two-track release earlier this year consisting of "Buy Your Own Flowers" and "Love song," which María performed in a COLORS session in partnership with Burberry last month, and marks her continued evolution as a songwriter and performer which she first showcased on her debut EP, Stuck in the Sky, released last year.

After releasing her debut single early last year, María has quickly cemented herself as an artist to watch in 2021. She's currently featured in the latest issue of Vogue, on newsstands now, and was recently interviewed by V Magazine who called her EP "sultry love letters disguised as songs lacquered with Reggaeton flair." She also received early praise from Pigeons & Planes, Wonderland and NYLON among others. Her voice and lyrics are refreshingly vulnerable and intimate, masterfully capturing emotion in both English and Spanish across her songs. As a lifelong poet, María bares her passions, struggles and experiences through her songs, which often begin as poems - exploring topics such as mental health, family history, her Dominican-American heritage and relationships - serving as the foundation of her development as a singer-songwriter.

Listen to and watch "No Soy Para Ti" above and stay tuned for more from María Isabel coming soon.
