

ABOUT CROSSES (†††):

Crosses (†††) comprise the minds of Chino Moreno of Deftones and producer/multiinstrumentalist Shaun Lopez, who have each solidified their names with the brooding songs they've respectively made for years both separately and together. Since uniting as Crosses in 2011, the duo have used lush electronic production; modular synths and crooning vocals to channel deep emotion. That same year they released their landmark EP † and the subsequent EP††. 3 years later, in 2014, they released their self-titled album. In 2020, Crosses re-emerged with a cover of Cause and Effect's synth-pop gem "The Beginning of the End." In keeping with tradition, at the end of 2021, they returned again to release another cover. This time of "Goodbye Horses" by Q Lazzarus on Warner Records, who they also announced a new record deal with. 2022 marks a new era for the group and promises more original music on the horizon to come.
